Struelens Testifies at Senate Quiz

Associated Press

The Katanga Government's top information officer in the United States testified yesterday at a closed hearing before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee.

The Senators and the witness, Michael Struelens, refused to give newsmen any inkling as to the nature of his testimony. The hearing lasted an hour and a half.

The State Department has invalidated Struelens' visa on the ground that he engaged in activities outside the information field specified in the document, but it has made no actual effort to expel him from the United States.

Sen. Thomas J. Dodd (D-Conn.), who presided yesterday, has been sharply critical of the State Department move against Struelens, and also of United Nations military action in the Congo, which he called "naked aggression" against Katanga.

Yesterday morning the Subcommittee questioned Robert F. Hale, Director of the State Department's visa office, reportedly concerning the invalidation of Struelens' visa. But Hale and the Senators declined to be quoted concerning this.

Both Dodd and Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R.N.Y.), the only other Senator present when Struelens testified, said Struelens may testify at a public hearing in the future, but this has not been decided definitely.

Dodd said, "it will be necessary to hear from some other witnesses. I am not going to name them."
